Course Description

A strong physician-nurse team is essential to optimize patient care. This course offers a unique environment that emphasizes team dynamics. There is a focus on the distinct technical roles of physicians and assistants (RN or GI technician), who must work hand-in-hand to achieve the highest success for ERCP procedures. Pancreaticobiliary endoscopy teams of physicians, nurses, technologists, and associates are encouraged to attend the course together.

The course features didactic and hands-on sessions. The didactic portion will highlight established approaches and new techniques related to ERCP practice. Lectures will use a case-based approach that incorporates videos and images. Q&A sessions allow ample time for attendee-faculty interaction. There is also a special section dedicated to assistants, including nurses and GI technicians.

Hands-on sessions are led by physician and nurse faculty and will emphasize proper use of technologies and techniques as they relate to physicians, nurses, and assistants. Teamwork will be highlighted, as success requires not only individual technical proficiency, but also deliberate and calm communication between physician and assistant. Participants will gain valuable pointers to optimize technique and team interaction, as procedural success is inherently linked to physician understanding and insight into the assistant's role, and vice-versa. Fluoroscopy will be used for select hands-on stations to enhance the learning experience.

Individuals may register for the course, but the focus is on a team-based approach. It is recommended that multiple members of the GI team attend the course together to maximize the experience.

Learning Objectives

Upon completion of this educational activity, participants will be able to:

- Describe how to avoid, minimize, and/or manage ERCP-related adverse events

Intended Audience
